HALDEN SPORT · REPLENISHMENT FLOW

Brand: HALDEN Sport, sports supplements (spec project, fictional brand)

Goal: Get customers to reorder before they run out, and move them to a subscription

Trigger: Placed order for Whey Isolate (30 servings)

Timing: Day 23 and day 28 after the order (Creatine, 60 servings: day 53 and 58)

Exit: Places a new order or starts a subscription

EMAIL 1

Timing: Day 23 after the order, about a week before the tub runs out

Subject: About 7 scoops left

Preview: Reorder today and it arrives before your last scoop.

> WHY IT WORKS The email lands when the customer actually needs it, with a specific number (7 scoops) they can check against their own tub. The delivery window makes the promise real. Two clear paths, reorder once or subscribe, let the customer choose, and the P.S. turns the subscription discount into a price per scoop they can feel.

Hey {{ first_name|default:'there' }},

If you've had a scoop a day since your order, your Whey Isolate has about 7 scoops left.

Reorder today and your next tub arrives in 3 to 5 days, before you run out.

No gap in your routine. No last-minute trip to the store for whatever protein is on the shelf.

EMAIL 2

Timing: Day 28 after the order, a few days before it runs out

Subject: Down to your last few scoops?

Preview: Order today and it arrives just in time.

> WHY IT WORKS The second email uses timing as honest urgency: with 3 to 5 day delivery, today is the day to reorder. The one-time reorder comes first, so customers who don't want a subscription can act in one click. Instead of repeating the subscription perks, it answers the common objection, getting locked in, with three specific ways to stay in control, and the price per scoop closes the case.

Hey {{ first_name|default:'there' }},

By now you're probably down to 2 or 3 scoops.

Order today, and your next tub arrives in 3 to 5 days. The sooner it ships, the shorter the gap.

WORRIED ABOUT GETTING STUCK IN A SUBSCRIPTION?

Fair question. Here's how ours works. You stay in control:

- Still have some left? Skip a month.
- Want a different flavor or delivery date? Change it anytime.
- Done? Cancel in two clicks, no calls, no emails.

And every order is 15% off with free shipping. That's $1.53 a scoop, every month, without having to remember.
